The minor in anthropology with an emphasis on archaeology consists of 25 credit hours in anthropology. Students must take Anthropology 201 and 401, and at least one course from both the regional studies in prehistory and archaeological method and theory categories. The remaining credit hours may be chosen from all three categories or another subfield (cultural or physical) of anthropology with the faculty adviser's permission. Once the coordinating adviser in the Department of Anthropology has approved the Minor Program Form, you should file the form with your college or school counselor. For further information about the minor program, contact the department.
