BUILDING A DIVERSE COMMUNITY OF SCHOLARS

Since 2006, CJRC has hosted the Summer Research Institute (SRI), an intensive research-oriented mentoring experience for young minority scholars from around the country to help advance their scholarship on crime and justice. The institute, funded by NSF, takes place in July; over the course of three weeks, scholars develop a research paper or proposal for submission, participate in professional development workshops and present their papers for feedback and review. To date, nearly 70 young faculty members have come through the institute.

Forcing a new understanding of the interrelationships among race, ethnicity, crime, and justice
FUNDING PARTNERS

CJRC is supported by funds from the College of Arts and Sciences; Office of Academic Affairs; Public Policy Academic Enrichment Initiative; governmental and private grants; and gifts from supporters.

INTERDISCIPLINARY PROJECTS

- Adolescent Health and Development in Context
- The Historical Violence Database: A Collaborative Research Project on the History of Violent Crime and Violent Death
- Spatial Crime Research Working Group

FACULTY RESEARCH

Amy Bonomi
Interpersonal Process Associated with Victim Recantation

Mark Davis and Amy Brunell
Exploring the Antecedents and Consequences of Narcissism within Health

Mark Davis and Valerie Callanan
Suicide in an American Community

Dana Haynie, Kristi Williams, Brian Soller, Nate Doogan and Christopher Keenan
The Dynamic Effect of Friendship Networks on Adolescent Risky Sexual Behavior

Lauren Krivo and Ruth Peterson
Understanding Crime and Community: A National Neighborhood Crime Study

CJRC-SPONSORED FACULTY PROJECTS

Sarah M. Brooks
Insecure Democracy: Crime Risks and Political Behavior in Brazil

Cynthia K. Buettner
The Student Recovery Project

“Our primary function is to serve as a catalyst for and facilitate collaborative interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary research on crime, delinquency, and justice issues and to provide information on funding opportunities, small grants, research awards, and in-kind support to facilitate studies of crime and justice issues.

Research conducted at CJRC reflects the diversity of interests of affiliated faculty and students. CJRC is positioning itself to become a national center of excellence at the forefront of knowledge about the interrelationships among race, ethnicity, crime and justice.”

(Dana Haynie, Director, CJRC)