The Ohio State University Press specializes in literary studies including narrative theory, Victorian studies, medieval studies and classics. It also acquires books in linguistics, regional studies, and publishes the annual winners of the university's non-fiction and poetry prizes. The Press publishes a distinguished group of journals including The Journal of Higher Education, American Periodicals and Narrative.

AT A GLANCE
The Ohio State University Press is a non-profit entity. It depends on financial contributions from those who value what scholarly communication does for both academia and our society.

CURRENT BOARD MEMBERS
- Robert Holub
- Angela Brintlinger
- Frederick Aldama
- Jill Galvan
- Terrell Morgan
- Sarah-Grace Heller
- Joe Ponce
- Jennifer Higginbotham
- Tom Hawkins
- Chad Allen

I just received my box of books! What a moment. The book looks great. Thank you again for all of your hard work – I had a great experience working with the Press.

{Ellen K. Rentz, author of Imagining the Parish in Late Medieval England}

PRESS PUBLISHINGS
Language Files, an introductory linguistics textbook now in its 11th edition; The Centenary Edition of the Works of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the definitive 23-volume edition of the American master’s writings; Dickens’ Journalism, a four-volume collection; The Death of Contract, a classic in legal studies; and Listen to Me Good, a moving autobiography of an Alabama midwife. The Press was the original publisher of the Helen Hooven Santmyer blockbuster “. . . And Ladies of the Club.”
“I am delighted to be publishing with a press that so carefully and transparently structures the process of copy-editing, formatting, and publication. I will certainly continue to speak highly of my experience with OSUP.”

(Joshua King, author of Imagined Spiritual Communities in Britain’s Age of Print)