The minor in human development and family science consists of 15 semester hours. The department focuses on issues related to normal human development across the lifespan and views the family as the primary context in which development occurs. A primary objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human and family development and the impact of developmental and social factors on the overall being of individuals and families.

The minor consists of the following Human Development and Family Science courses: 2200, 2400, 3440, and two additional courses chosen from: 3200, 4370, 5340, 5350, 5410, and 5430. All course prerequisites must be met.

After the academic program coordinator in the College of Education and Human Ecology has approved the minor program form, students should file it with their college or school counselor.
